Thanks Lily. I got a very small bit of feedback regarding the meeting last week and it did not seem to go well unless you're a firm that rents excavating and earthmoving equipment. From what I was told, excavation is the preferred investigative method for all survey units. Both cost and schedule would be adversely affected, and I don't think the sewer and storm drain line excavations are worthy of this much attention. The piping and soil immediately around the pipe has been disposed and it seems unlikely that the trench overburden was contaminated via pipe leaks. The problem is an old one as documented on the attached monthly project report under issues. I'm interested to hear your opinions and think it's appropriate to discuss the path forward at our next meeting. Thanks, Pat

Dear Pat,

I heard from John that at the managers meeting he said he didn't think that we should talk about the path forward at the November 7 technical meeting. But later I talk to him and he said actually that was OK if that's what you would like to do. he did not have strong feelings either way. So we will leave it up to you.
